

Background

- A bespoke evidence based educational resource building upon the React to Red concept
- The concept aims to increase knowledge and awareness of pressure ulcer prevention and early intervention measures amongst carers, care home staff and all care providers with a focus on:
 - Reducing unwarranted variation of care
 - Reduce incidence and harm from pressure ulcers
 - Reducing hospital admissions
- The 5 year forward view supports integrated models of care which reduce variation, harm and hospital admissions

In order to achieve successful impacts and outcomes the following model has shown to be effective

Step 1

Identify a strategic lead to plan and develop a model

- Identify the issue for your population/commissioned care settings
 - consider existing/development of robust data sources for pressure ulcer incidence/prevalence – to establish both baseline and impact evaluation
 - consider care provider needs
- Consider existing care pathway provision and identify a clinical lead (ideally TVN) to embed the model
- Identify resource implications and develop a business case
- Consider the best approach to embed as a quality improvement initiative within your health economy, as a CQUIN or within a Quality Improvement Framework

Step 2

- The Clinical lead champions the model for delivery and engages with care providers – e.g. via an existing Care Home Forum
- Develop a plan for training/evaluation – consider qualitative as well as quantitative measurements as well as timescales
- Establish link champions and develop a train the trainer approach using the React to Red training resource
- Consider an official launch and to develop an organisational communication strategy
- Consider how to engage carers/patients – patient information leaflet

Step 3

- Implement training programme
- Undertake impact analysis
- Evaluate and socialise/celebrate your success
- Consider the best approach for embedding as a quality improvement initiative
- Consider an ongoing training model for care providers
- Work with local CCG / Local Authority and negotiate how to include React to Red within contracts with Care Homes
